

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY

3 1761 02491874 0

THE MIRACLE AND OTHER POEMS

BY VIRNA SHEARD

THE MIRACLE
AND OTHER POEMS

THE MIRACLE

AND OTHER POEMS

BY VIRNA SHEARD

TORONTO: J. M. DENT & SONS LTD.

27 MELINDA STREET • 1913

PR
8199

45 050 144

.3
S511
M5
C.1

APR 18 1956

TO MY DEAR BROTHER

ELDRIDGE STANTON (JUNIOR)

WHO DIED BRAVELY AT NIAGARA, ON THE AFTERNOON OF SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 4TH, 1912.

No tears for thee, no tears, or sighs,

Or breaking heart—

But smiles, that thou so well that bitter hour

Didst play thy part!

VIRNA SHEARD.

CONTENTS

	PAGE
THE MIRACLE	1
THE CROW	7
WHEN APRIL COMES	9
KISMET	10
A SONG OF SUMMER DAYS	11
AT THE PLAY	12
CHRISTMAS	14
THE HEART COURAGEOUS	16
A SONG	17
THE CALL	18
THE KNIGHT-ERRANT	20
A SOUTHERN LULLABY	22
THE FAIRY CLOCK	24
THE SLUMBER ANGEL	26
THE LONELY ROAD	27
SEA-BORN	29
THE ANGEL	30
WHEN CHRISTMAS COMES	32
THE OPAL MONTH	34
NOCTURNE	36
A SONG OF LOVE	37
THE UNKNOWING	38
THE PETITION	40
HALLOWE'EN	41
THE GLEANER	42
THE ROVER	43
IN SOLITUDE	45
THE ROBIN	46
A SONG OF ROSES	47
PRAIRIE	49
THE CLIMBER	50
THE DAISY	52
THE VISION	53

	PAGE
SAINTS	54
AT MIDNIGHT	56
NOVEMBER	58
THE LILY-POND	60
LILACS	61
APRIL.	63
PAEANS	64
THE HARP	65
GULLS	66
THE SHEPHERD WIND	68
THE TEMPLE	70
REQUEST	72
A SONG	74
THE TOAST	75
THE SEA-SHELL	77
AT DAWN	78
THE WHISTLER	79
COMMON-WEALTH	81
DON CUPID.	82
HEAVEN	83
SIR HENRY IRVING	85
JEAN DE BREBŒUF	87
IN EGYPT	93
A SONG OF POPPIES	109
A PAGAN PRAYER	110
A LOVE SONG	111

THE MIRACLE AND OTHER POEMS

THE MIRACLE

UP from the templed city of the Jews,
The road ran straight and white
To Jericho, the City of the Palms,
The City of Delight.

Down that still road from far Judean hills
The shepherds drove their sheep
At silver dawn—at stirring of the birds—
When men were all asleep.

Full many went that weary way at noon,
Or rested by the trees,
Romans and slaves, Gentiles and bearded priests,
Sinners and Pharisees.

But when the pink clouds drifted far and high,
Like rose leaves blowing past,
When in the west where one star blessed the sky
The gates of day shut fast.

All travellers journeyed home, and the moonlight

Washed the road fresh and sweet,
Until it seemed a gleaming ivory path,
Waiting for royal feet.

.

Now it was noon, and life at its full tide
Rolled ever to and fro,
A restless sea, between Jerusalem
And white-walled Jericho.

Blind Bartimeus, by the highway side,
Sat begging 'neath the trees,
And heard the world go by, Gentiles and Jews,
Sinners and Pharisees.

Blind Bartimeus of the mask-like face,
And patient, outstretched hand—
He upon whom his God had set a mark
No man might understand;

Blind Bartimeus of the lonely dark,
Who knew no thing called fear,
But dreamt his dreams, and heard the little sounds
No man but he could hear.

The Miracle

3

He heard the beating of the bird's soft wings
Uprising through the air;
He heard the camel's footfall in the dust,
And knew who travelled there.

He heard the lizard when it moved at noon
On the grey, sunlit wall;
He heard the far-off temple bells, what time
He felt the shadows fall.

Now, in the golden hour, he stooped to hear
A muffled sound and low,
The tramping of a myriad sandalled feet
That came from Jericho.

Then on the road a little lad he knew
Ran past, with eager cry,
"Ho, Bartimeus! Give thine heart good cheer,
For David's Son comes by!

"He comes! He comes! And, sad one, who can say
What He may do for thee?
He makes the lame to walk! He heals the sick!
He makes the blind to see!"

"He makes the blind to see! Oh, God of Hosts,
Beyond the sky called blue,

What if Messiah cometh to His own!

What if the words be true! ”

On his swift way the little herald sped,

Like bird upon the wing,

And left the lean, brown beggar—world-forgot—

Waiting for Israel's King.

But when the dust came whirling to his feet—

When the mad throng drew near—

Blind Bartimeus rose, and from his lips

A cry rang loud and clear—

The cry of all the ages, of each soul

In sad captivity;

The endless cry from depths of bitter woe—

“ Have mercy upon me! ”

What though the wild oncoming multitude

Jested and bade him cease;

What though the Scribes and mighty Pharisees

Told him to keep his peace;

What though his heart grew faint, and all the strength

Slipped from each trembling limb—

The One of all the earth his soul desired

Stood still—and spoke to him.

Then silence fell, while the upheaving throng,
As sea-waves backward curled,
Left a great path, and down the path there shone
The Light of all the world.

The Light from whose mysterious golden depths
The Sun rose in his might—
The light from whose white, hidden fires were lit
The torches of the night;

The Light that shining on a thing of clay
Giveth it Life and Will:
The Light that with an unknown power can blast
And bid all life be still;

The Light that calls a ray of its own light
A man's undying soul—
The Light that lifts the broken lives of earth,
Touches and makes them whole.

Up towards the Radiance Bartimeus went,
Alone, and poor, and blind—
Feeling his way, if haply it led on
To One he fain would find.

Then spoke the Voice again. Oh, mystic words
Of a compelling grace:

The curtain rose from off his darkened sight—
He saw the King's own face.

So strangely beautiful—so strangely near—
He worshipped with his eyes,
Unheeding that for him at last there shone
The sunlit noonday skies.

What though the clamouring crowd echoed his name
Unto its utmost rim,
He only saw the Christ—and in the light
He rose and followed Him.

.
Oh, Bartimeus of the mask-like face,
And patient, outstretched hand,
Was it for this God set on thee the mark
No man might understand?

THE CROW

HAIL, little herald!—Art thou then returning
From summer lands, this wild and wind-torn day?

Hast brought the word for which our hearts are yearning,

That spring is on the way?

Hark! Now there comes a clear, insistent calling,

From hill tops crested with untarnished snow;
The trumpet notes are drifting—floating—falling—

Whene'er the breezes blow!

“ Winter is over, and the spring is coming! ”

Glad is thy message, little page in black—

“ Winter is over, and the spring is coming—
The spring is coming back! ”

Tell me, O prophet, bird of sombre feather,
Who taught thee all the mysteries of spring?—
Didst note each passing mood of wind and weather,

While flying to the North on buoyant wing?

Or didst thou rest upon the bare brown branches

And hear the sap go singing through the trees?—

Didst watch with keen, far-seeing downward glances,

The leaves unlock their cells with fairy keys?

What though thy voice hath not a trace of sweetness

It thrills one through and through,

With promises of joy in all completeness

What time the skies are blue.

When robins from the apple-trees are flinging

Out on the air their silver shower of song,—

In lilac days, when children run a-singing,

No single thought shall do thy memory wrong.

“ Winter is over and the spring is coming! ”

Sweet are thy tidings, little page in black—

“ Winter is over and the spring is coming—

The spring is coming back! ”

WHEN APRIL COMES !

WHEN April comes with softly shining eyes,
And daffodils bound in her wind-blown hair,
Oh, she will coax all clouds from out the skies,
And every day will bring some sweet surprise,—
The swallows will come swinging through the air
When April comes !

When April comes with tender smile and tear,
Dear dandelions will gild the common ways,
And at the break of morning we will hear
The piping of the robins crystal clear—
While bobolinks will whistle through the days,
When April comes !

When April comes, the world so wise and old,
Will half forget that it is worn and grey;
Winter will seem but as a tale long told—
Its bitter winds with all its frost and cold
Will be the by-gone things of yesterday,
When April comes !

KISMET

Love came to her unsought,
Love served her many ways,
And patiently Love followed her
Throughout the nights and days.

Love spent his life for her
And hid his tears and sighs;
He bartered all his soul for her,
With tender pleading eyes.

Her scarlet mouth that smiled,
Mocked lightly at his woe,
And while she would not bid him stay
She did not bid him go.

But hope within him failed
Until he pled no more—
And cold and still he turned his face
Away from her heart's door.

.
Long were the days she watched
For one who never came;—
Through sleepless nights her white lips bore
The burden of a name.

A SONG OF SUMMER DAYS

As pearls slip off a silken string and fall into the sea,

These rounded summer days fall back into eternity.

Into the deep from whence they came; into the mystery—

At set of sun each one slips back as pearls into the sea.

They are so sweet—so warm and sweet—Love
fain would hold them fast:

He weeps when through his finger tips they slip away at last.

AT THE PLAY

Just above the boxes and where the high lights
fall

Looketh down a carven face from out the gilded wall.

Van Dyke beard and broidered ruff silently confess

That he lived—and loved perchance—in days of Good Queen Bess.

(Laces fine and linen sheer, curled and perfumed
hair

Well became those gentlemen of gay, insouciant air.)

See! He gazeth evermore at the stage below;
Noteth well the players as they quickly come and go;

Queens and kings and maidens fair, motley
fools and friars,

Lords and ladies, stately dames, mounted knights and squires.

Well he knoweth all of them, all the grave and gay,
These are they he dreamt of in the far and far away;

Saints and sinners, see they come down the bygone years,
And the world still shares with them its laughter and its tears.

Still we haunt the greenwood for love of Rosalind,
Still we hear the jester's bells ajingle on the wind,
Still the frenzied Moor we fear—Ah! and even yet
Breathless wait before the tomb of all the Capulet.

Though the slow years pass away, yet on land and sea,
Follow we the Danish Prince in sad soliloquy;
And I fancy sometimes when the round moon saileth high
Yet in Venice meet the Jew—as he goeth by.

(Just above the boxes and where the high lights
fall
Looketh down a carven face from out the gilded wall.)

CHRISTMAS

WITH all the little children, far and near,
God wot! to-day we'll sing a song of cheer!
To rosy lips and eyes, that know not guile,
We one and all will give back smile for smile;
And for the sake of all the small and gay
We will be children also for to-day.

Holly we'll hang, with mistletoe above!
God wot! to-day we'll sing a song of love!
And we will trip on merry heel and toe
With all the fair who lightly come and go;
We will deny the years that lie behind
And say that age is only in the mind.

And to the needy, in whatever place,
God wot! to-day we'll lend a hand of grace;
For where is he who hath not need himself,
Although he dine on silver or on delf?
And we who pass and nod this Christmas Day
May never meet again on life's highway.

But when the lights are lit, and day has flown—
God wot! there will be some who sit alone;
Who sit and gaze into the embers' glow,
And watch strange things that flitter to and fro—
The ghosts of dreams; and faces—long unseen;
Shadows of shadows—things that once have been.

THE HEART COURAGEOUS

Who hath a heart courageous
Will fight with right good cheer;
For well may he his foes out-face
Who owns no foe called Fear!

Who hath a heart courageous
Will fight as knight of old
For that which he doth count his own—
Against the world to hold.

Who hath a heart courageous
Will fight both night and day,
Against the Host Invisible—
That holds his soul at bay.

Who hath a heart courageous
Rests with tranquillity,
For Time he counts not as his foe,
Nor Death his enemy.

A SONG

Love maketh its own summer time,
'Tis June, Love, when we are together,
And little I care for the frost in the air,
For the heart makes its own summer weather.

Love maketh its own winter time,
And though the hills blossom with heather,
If you are not near, 'tis December, my dear,
For the heart makes its own winter weather.

THE CALL

ACROSS the dusty, foot-worn street
Unblessed of flower or tree,
Faint and far-off—there ever sounds
The calling of the sea.

From out the quiet of the hills,
Where purple shadows lie,
The pine trees murmur, "Come and rest
And let the world go by."

The west wind whispers all night long
"Oh, journey forth afar
To the green and pleasant places
Where little rivers are!"

And the soft and silken rustling
Of bending yellow wheat
Says, "See the harvest moon—that dims
The arc-lights of the street."

Though the city holds thee captive
By trick, and wile, and lure,

Out yonder lies the loveliness
Of things that shall endure.

The river road is wide and fair,
The prairie-path is free,
And still the old earth waits to give
Her strength and joy to thee.

THE KNIGHT-ERRANT

Keen in his blood ran the old mad desire
To right the world's wrongs and champion truth;

Deep in his eyes shone a heaven-lit fire,
And royal and radiant day-dreams of youth!

Gracious was he to both beggar and stranger,
And for a rose tossed from fair finger-tips
He would have ridden hard-pressed through all danger,

The rose on his heart and a song on his lips!

All the king's foes he counted his foemen;
His not to say that a cause could be lost;
Spirits like his faced the enemies' bowmen
On long vanished fields—nor counted the cost.

Wide was his out-look and far was his vision;
Soul-fretting trifles he sent down the wind;
Small griefs gained only his cheerful derision,—
God's weather always was fair to his mind.

But he would comfort a child who was crying,
Knightly his deed to all such in distress;
Never a beast by the road-side lay dying
He did not stoop to with gentle caress.

And by the old, and the sad, and the broken,
 Often he lingered, a well-beloved guest;
 Dear was his voice, whate'er the word spoken,
 Sweetening their day with a song or a jest.

In the far times of brave ballad and story,
 Men of his make kept the gates of the sea,
 Wrought mighty deeds of power and glory,
 Scattered their tyrants, and set the land free!

In the far times when perchance hearts were stronger,
 When for a faith men could face death alone,
 And it would seem that love lasted longer,
 Such a white soul would have come to its own.

Down in the city the people but noted
 One who was silent when things went awry,
 Toiled at dull tasks, and was strangely devote
 To small deeds of kindness that others passe
 by.

Down in the city the people but noted
 One who thought little of wealth and its ways;
 One whose true words were full often misquoted,
 One who laughed lightly at blame or at praise.

A SOUTHERN LULLABY

LITTLE honey baby, shet yo' eyes up tight;—
(Shadow-man is comin' from de moon!)—
You's as sweet as roses if dey is so pink an white;
(Shadow-man 'll get here mighty soon.)

Little honey baby, keep yo' footses still!—
(Rocky-bye, oh, rocky, rocky-bye!)
Hush yo' now, an listen to dat lonesome whip-po'-will;
Don't yo' fix yo' lip an start to cry.

Little honey baby, stop dat winkin' quick!
(Hear de hoot-owl in de cotton-wood!)
Yess—I sees yo' eyes adoin' dat dere triflin' trick—
(He gets chillun if dey isn't good.)

Little honey baby, what yo' think yo' see?—
(Sister keep on climbin' to de sky—)
Dat's a June bug—it aint got no stinger, lak
a bee—
(Reach de glory city by an by.)

Little honey baby, what yo' skeery at?—

(Go down, Moses—down to Phar-e-oh,)—

No—dat isn't nuffin but a furry fly-round bat;—

(Say, he'd betta let dose people go.)

Little honey baby, yo' is all ma own,—

Deed yo' is.—Yes,—dat's a fia-fly;—

If I didn't hab yo'—reckon I'd be all alone;

(Rocky-bye—oh, rocky, rocky-bye.)

Little honey baby, shet yo' eyes up tight;—

(Shadow man is comin' from de moon,)

You's as sweet as roses, if dey is so pink and white;

(Shadow-man 'll get here mighty soon.)

The lines in brackets are supposed to be sung or chanted. The Southern "Mammy" seldom sang a song through, but interladed it with comments.—V.S.

THE FAIRY CLOCK

SILVER clock! O silver clock! tell to me the time o' day!

Is there yet a little hour left for us to work and play?

Tell me when the sun will set—tiny globe of silver-grey.

It has been so glad a world since the coming of the morn,

Oft I wondered when I met any souls who seemed forlorn—

And I scarce gave heed to those who were old or travel worn.

Mayhap I have loved too well the merry fleeting things;

Run too lightly with the wind—chased too many shining wings;

Thought too seldom of the night, and the silence that it brings.

Well I fear me I have been but an idler in the sun—

All unfinished are the tasks long and long ago begun—

In the dark perchance they weep, who have left their work undone.

And I know each black-frocked friar preacheth sermons that, alas!

Fain would halt the dancing feet of those careless ones who pass

Down a sweet and primrose path, through the ribbons of the grass.

Silver-clock! O Silver-clock! It was only yesterday

Dandelions flecked the field, starry bright, and gold and gay;

You are but the ghost of one—little globe of silver-grey!

Tell me—tell me of the hour—for there is so much to do!

Is it early? Is it late? Fairy clock! O tell me true,

As I blow you down the wind, out upon a road of blue.

THE SLUMBER ANGEL

WHEN day is ended, and grey twilight flies
On silent wings across the tired land,
The slumber angel cometh from the skies—
The slumber angel of the peaceful eyes,
And with the scarlet poppies in his hand.

His robes are dappled like the moonlit seas,
His hair in waves of silver floats afar;
He weareth lotus-bloom and sweet heartsease,
With tassels of the rustling green fir trees,
As down the dusk he steps from star to star.

Above the world he swings his curfew bell,
And sleep falls soft on golden heads and white;
The daisies curl their leaves beneath his spell,
The prisoner who wearies in his cell
Forgets awhile, and dreams throughout the night.

Even so, in peace, comes that great Lord of rest
Who crowneth men with amaranthine flowers;
Who telleth them the truths they have but guessed,
Who giveth them the things they love the best,
Beyond this restless, rocking world of ours.

THE LONELY ROAD

WE used to fear the lonely road
That twisted round the hill;
It dipped down to the river-way,
And passed the haunted mill,
And then crept on, until it reached
The churchyard, green and still.

No pipers ever took that road,
No gipsies, brown and gay;
No shepherds with their gentle flocks,
No loads of scented hay;
No market-waggon's jingled by
On any Saturday.

The dog-wood there flung wide its stars,
In April, silvery sweet;
The squirrels crossed that path all day
On tiny flying feet;
The wild, brown rabbits knew each turn,
Each shadowy safe retreat.

And there the golden-belted bee
Sang his sweet summer song,

The crickets chirped there to the moon
With steady note and strong;
Till cold and silence wrapped them round
When autumn nights grew long.

But, oh! they brought the lonely dead
Along that quiet way,
With strange procession, dark and slow,
On sunny days and grey;
We used to watch them, wonder-eyed,
Nor care again to play.

And we forgot each merry jest;
The birds on bush and tree
Silenced the song within their throats
And with us watched to see,
The soft, slow passing out of sight
Of that dark mystery.

.

We fear no more the lonely road
That winds around the hill;
Far from the busy world's highway
And the gods' slow-grinding mill;
It only seems a peaceful path,
Pleasant, and green, and still.

SEA-BORN

AFAR in the turbulent city,
In a hive where men make gold,
He stood at his loom from dawn to dark,
While the passing years were told.

And when he knew it was summer-time
By the grey dust on the street,
By the lingering hours of daylight,
And the sultry noon-tide heat—

Oh! he longed as a captive sea-bird
To leave his cage and be free,
For his heart like a shell kept singing
The old, old song of the sea.

And amid the noise and confusion
Of wheels that were never still,
He heard the wind through the scented pines
On a rough, storm-beaten hill;

While, beyond a maze of painted threads
Where his tireless shuttle flew,
In fancy he saw the sunlit waves
Beckon him out to the blue.

THE ANGEL

Down the white ward with slow, unswerving tread

He came ere break of day—
A cowl was drawn about his down-bent head,
His misty robes were grey.

And no man even knew that he went by,
None saw or heard him pass;
Softly he moved as clouds drift down the sky,
Or shadows cross the grass.

Close to a little bed where one lay low,
At last he took his stand,
And touched the head that tossed in restless woe
With gentle, outstretched hand.

“When bitterness,” he said, “is at an end,
And joy grows far and dim,
I am the angel whom the Lord doth send
To lead men on to Him.

“Past the innumerable stars, my friend,
Past all the winds that blow,
We, too, must travel to our journey’s end.
Arise! And let us go!”

“Stay! Stay!” the other cried. “I know thy face!

Death is thy dreaded name!”

“Nay—I am known as ‘Love’ in that far place,”

He said, “from whence I came.”

But still the other cried, with moan and tear,

“I fear the dark—and thee!”

“There is no dark,” the angel said, “nor fear,

For those who go with me.

“There is no loneliness, and nevermore

The shadow-haunted night,

When we pass out beyond Life’s swinging door

The road,” he said, “is bright.”

Then backward slipped the cowl from off his head,

Downward the robe of grey;

A radiant presence by the lowly bed

Greeted the breaking day.

.

Within the long white ward one lay alone,

None watched by him awhile,

But some who passed him said, in whispered tone,

“See—on his lips—the smile!”

WHEN CHRISTMAS COMES

For thee, my small one—trinkets and new toys,
The wine of life and all its keenest joys,
When Christmas comes.

For me, the broken playthings of the past
That in my folded hands I still hold fast,
When Christmas comes.

For thee, fair hopes of all that yet may be,
And tender dreams of sweetest mystery,
When Christmas comes.

For thee, the future in a golden haze,
For me, the memory of some bygone days,
When Christmas comes.

For thee, the things that lightly come and go,
For thee, the holly and the mistletoe,
When Christmas comes.

For me, the smiles that are akin to tears,
For me, the frost and snows of many years,
When Christmas comes.

For thee, the twinkling candles bright and gay,
For me, the purple shadows and the grey,
When Christmas comes.

For thee, the friends that greet thee at the door,
For me, the faces I shall see no more,
When Christmas comes.

But ah, for both of us the mystic star
That leadeth back to Bethlehem afar,
When Christmas comes.

For both of us the child they saw of old,
That evermore his mother's arms enfold,
When Christmas comes.

THE OPAL MONTH

Now cometh October—a nut-brown maid,
Who in robes of crimson and gold arrayed
 Hath taken the king's highway!
On the world she smiles—but to me it seems
Her eyes are misty with mid-summer dreams,
 Or memories of the May.

Opals agleam in the dusk of her hair
Flash their hearts of fire and colours rare
 As she dances gaily by—
Yet she sighs for each empty swinging nest,
And she tenderly holds against her breast
 A belated butterfly.

The crickets sing no more to the stars—
The spiders no more put up silver bars
 To entangle silken wings;
But the quail pipes low in the rusted corn,
And here and there—both at night and at morn—
 A lonely robin still sings.

A spice-laden breeze of the south is blent
With perfumed winds from the Orient
And they weave o'er her a spell,
For nun-like she goeth now, still and sweet—
And while mists like incense curl at her feet,
She lingers her beads to tell.

NOCTURNE

INFOLD us with thy peace, dear moon-lit night,
And let thy silver silence wrap us round
Till we forget the city's dazzling light,
The city's ceaseless sound.

Here where the sand lies white upon the shore,
And little velvet-fingered breezes blow,
Dear sea, thy world-old wonder-song once more
Sing to us e'er we go.

Give us thy garnered sweets, short summer hour:
Perfume of rose, and balm of sun-steeped pine;
Scent from the lily's cup and hornèd flower,
Where bees have drained the wine.

Come, small musicians in the rough sea grass,
Pipe us the serenade we love the best;
And winds of midnight, chant for us a mass,
Our hearts would be at rest.

God of all beauty, though the world is thine,
Our faith grows often faint, oft hope is spent;
Show us Thyself in all things fair and fine,
Teach us the stars' content.

A SONG OF LOVE

Love reckons not by time—its May days of delight

Are swifter than the falling stars that pass beyond our sight.

Love reckons not by time—its moments of despair

Are years that march like prisoners, who drag
the chains they wear.

Love counts not by the sun—it hath no night or day—

'Tis only light when love is near—'tis dark with love away.

Love hath no measurements of height, or depth,
or space,

But yet within a little grave it oft hath found a place.

Love is its own best law—its wrongs seek no redress;

Love is forgiveness—and it only knoweth how to bless.

THE UNKNOWING

If the bird knew how through the wintry weather
An empty nest would swing by day and night,
It would not weave the strands so close together
Or sing for such delight.

And if the rosebud dreamed e'er its awaking
How soon its perfumed leaves would drift apart, Perchance 'twould fold them close to still the aching
Within its golden heart.

If the brown brook that hurries through the grasses
Knew of drowned sailors—and of storms to be—
Methinks 'twould wait a little e'er it passes
To meet the old grey sea.

If youth could understand the tears and sorrow,
The sombre days that age and knowledge bring,
It would not be so eager for the morrow
Or spendthrift of the spring.

If love but learned how soon life treads its measure,

How short and swift its hours when all is told,
Each kiss and tender word 'twould count and treasure,

As misers count their gold.

THE PETITION

SWEET April! from out of the hidden place
Where you keep your green and gold,
We pray thee to bring us a gift of grace,
When the little leaves unfold.

Oh! make us glad with the things that are young;
Give our hearts the quickened thrills
That used to answer each robin that sung
In the days of daffodils.

For what is the worth of all that we gain,
If we lose the old delight,
That came in the time of sun and rain,
When the whole round world seemed right?

It was then we gave, as we went along,
The faith that to-day we keep;
And those April days were for mirth and song,
While the nights were made for sleep.

Yet, though we follow with steps that are slow
The feet that dance and that run;
We would still be friends with the winds that blow,
And companions to the sun!

HALLOWE'EN

There is an old Italian legend which says that on the eve of the beloved festival of All Saints (Hallowe'en) the souls of the dead return to earth for a little while and go by on the wind. The feast of All Saints is followed by the feast of the dead, when for a day only the sound of the Miserere is heard throughout the cities of Italy.

HARK! Hark to the wind! 'Tis the night, they say,

When all souls come back from the far away—
The dead, forgotten this many a day!

And the dead remembered—ay! long and well—
And the little children whose spirits dwell
In God's green garden of asphodel.

Have you reached the country of all content,
O souls we know, since the day you went
From this time-worn world, where your years were spent?

Would you come back to the sun and the rain,
The sweetness, the strife, the thing we call pain,
And then unravel life's tangle again?

I lean to the dark—Hush!—was it a sigh?
Or the painted vine-leaves that rustled by?
Or only a night-bird's echoing cry?

THE GLEANER

As children gather daisies down green ways
Mid butterflies and bees,
To-day across the meadows of past days
I gathered memories.

I stored my heart with harvest of lost hours—
With blossoms of spent years;
Leaves that had known the sun of joy, and hours
Drenched with the rain of tears.

And perfumes that were long ago distilled
From April's pink and white,
Again with all their old enchantment, filled
My spirit with delight.

From out the limbo where lost roses go
The place we may not see,
With all its petals sweet and half-ablow,
One rose returned to me.

Where falls the sunlight chequered by the shade
On meadows of the past,
I gathered blossoms that no sun can fade
No winter wind can blast.

THE ROVER

THOUGH I follow a trail to north or south,
 Though I travel east or west,
There's a little house on a quiet road
 That my hidden heart loves best;
And when my journeys are over and done,
 'Tis there I will go to rest.

The snows have bleached it this many a year;
 The sun has painted it grey;
The vines hold it close in their clinging arms;
 The shadows creep there to stay;
And the wind goes calling through empty rooms
 For those who have gone away.

But the roses against the window-pane
 Are the roses I used to know;
And the rain on the roof still sings the song
 It sang in the long ago,
When I lay me down to sleep in a bed
 Little and white and low.

It is long since I bid it all good-bye,
 With young light-hearted disdain;

I remember who stood at the door that day:

Her tears fell fast as the rain;

And I whistled a tune and waved my hand,

But never went back again.

Toll I have paid at the gates of the world,

The sand I know and the sea;

I have taken the wide and open road,

With steps unhindered and free;

Yet, like a bell ringing down in my heart,

My home is calling to me.

IN SOLITUDE

HE is not desolate whose ship is sailing
Over the mystery of an unknown sea,
For some great love with faithfulness unfailing
Will light the stars to bear him company.

Out in the silence of the mountain passes,
The heart makes peace and liberty its own—
The wind that blows across the scented grasses
Bringing the balm of sleep—comes not alone.

Beneath the vast illimitable spaces
Where God has set His jewels in array,
A man may pitch his tent in desert places
Yet know that heaven is not so far away.

But in the city—in the lighted city—
Where gilded spires point toward the sky,
And fluttering rags and hunger ask for pity,
Grey Loneliness in cloth-of-gold, goes by.

THE ROBIN

LITTLE brown brother, up in the apple tree,
High on its blossom-rimmed branches aswing,
Here where I listen earth-bound, it seems to me
You are the voice of the spring.

Herald of Hope to the sad and faint-hearted,
Piper the gold of the world cannot pay,
Up from the limbo of things long departed
Memories you bring me to-day.

You are the echo of songs that are over,
You are the promise of songs that will come,
You know the music, oh, light-winged rover,
Sealed in the souls of the dumb.

All of the past that we wearily sigh for,
All of the future for which our hearts long,
All Love would live for, and all Love would die for
Wordless, you weave in a song.

Little brown brother, up in the apple tree,
My spirit answers each note that you sing,
And while I listen—earth-bound—it seems to me
You are the voice of the spring.

A SONG OF ROSES

'Tis time to sing of roses: of roses all ablow,
To every vagrant passing breeze they dip a courtesy low,
'Tis time to sing of roses! for June is here, you know.

One song for true love's roses of sweetest deepest red,
Some heart will wear you faithfully when life itself hath fled,
And for the white rose sing a song—the white rose for the dead.

And ah! the yellow roses, of brightest, lightest
gold,
King Midas must have touched their leaves in mystic days of old,
Or they were made of sunshine, and gilded, fold
by fold.

And the roadside rose, sweet-briar, we would remember thee

And the cinnamon rose that evermore enthralls
each passing bee,
You old, old-fashioned roses, a-growing wild and free.

'Tis time to sing of roses! of roses all ablow!

They come again, as sweet, my dear, as those of long ago.

'Tis time to sing of roses! for June is here you know.

PRAIRIE

WHERE yesterday rolled long waves of gold
Beneath the burnished blue of the sky,
A silver-white sea lies still and cold,
And a bitter wind blows by.

But nothing passes the door all day,
Though my watching eyes grow worn and dim,
Save a lean, grey wolf that swings away
To the far horizon rim.

Then, one by one, the stars glisten out
Like frozen tears on a purple pall—
The darkness folds my cabin about
And the snow begins to fall.

I will make a hearth-fire red and bright
And set a light by the window pane
For one who follows the trail to-night
That will bring him home again.

Love will ride with him my heart to bless—
Joy will out-step him across the floor—
What matters the great white loneliness
When we bar the cabin door?

THE CLIMBER

HE stood alone on Fame's high mountain top,
His hands at rest, his forehead bound with bay;
And yet he watched with eyes unsatisfied
The downward winding way.

The great procession of the stars went by Far overhead, beyond the mountain's rim,
But the unconquered worlds of time and space,
As nothing were to him.

There from his vantage ground, so still and high,
He watched the storm clouds when they rolled below,
And felt the wind mount up to where he stood
Amid eternal snow.

And sometimes in the valleys and the plains
He saw the little children at their play;
In cottage homes he saw the candle-light
Gleam out at close of day.

But he and loneliness kept feast and fast,
The while with weary eyes, by night and day;

They watched the path that led to common things—

The downward winding way.

“ ’Twas there,” he said, “ that gladness passed me by,

In yonder valley, where I sought the truth;
And there, a few leagues up the rocky slope,
I said good-bye to Youth.

“ There, where the pine trees catch the sun’s last gold,

Love reached its hands to me and bade me
stop;

Oh, madness of the ones who climb,” he said,

“ Up to the mountain top! ”

THE DAISY

AN angel found a daisy where it lay

On Heaven's highroad of transparent gold,
And, turning to one near, he said, "I pray,
Tell me what manner of strange bloom I hold.
You came a long, long way—perchance you know
In what far country such fair flowers blow?"

Then spoke the other: "Turn thy radiant face
And gaze with me down purple depth of space.
See, where the stars lie spilled upon the night,
Like amber beads that hold a yellow light.
Note one that burns with faint yet steady glow;
It is the Earth—and there these blossoms grow.
Some little child from that dear, distant land
Hath borne this hither in his dimpled hand."

Still gazed he down. "Ah, friend," he said, "I, too,
Oft crossed the fields at home where daisies grew."

THE VISION

LONG had she knelt at the Madonna's shrine,
With the empty chapel, cold and grey,
Telling her beads, while grief with marring line
And bitter tear stole all her youth away.

Outcast was she from what Life holdeth dear;
Banished from joy that other souls might win;
And from the dark beyond she turned with fear,
Being so branded by the mark of sin.

Yet when at last she raised her troubled face,
Haunted by sorrow, whitened by alarms,
Mary leaned down from out the pictured place,
And laid the little Christ within her arms.

Rosy and warm she held Him to her heart,
She—the abandoned one—the thing apart.

SAINTS

THE Saints of Thy great Church, O Christ,
How vast their numbers be—
On holy page and ancient scroll
Their blessed names we see,
And from the painted window panes
They smile eternally.

Rope-girdled monk, and pallid maid,
And men who for Thy cross
Fought with the Saracen of old,
Counting their lives no loss—
Martyrs who rose through golden flames,
Free of the body's dross.

Yet there be Saints uncanonised,
Unrecognised, unknown—
Here on the common roads of earth,
Oft times they walk alone;
Saints whom no soul hath ever praised,
Saints whom no Church doth own.

Men who against their souls' grim foes
Wage an unyielding fight;

Men of new creeds, and men of old,
Men of dark hue, and white;
Each pressing hard towards some far gleam
Of Thy celestial light.

Dwellers in places waste and lone,
Toilers upon the seas—
Mayhap they seldom pray high heaven
Softly—on bended knees—
Yet in the roll-call of Thy Saints,
Dear Christ—remember these.

AT MIDNIGHT

TURN Thou the key upon our thoughts, dear Lord,
And let us sleep;
Give us our portion of forgetfulness,
Silent and deep.

Lay Thou Thy quiet hand upon our eyes
To close their sight;
Shut out the shining of the moon and stars
And candle-light.

Keep back the phantoms and the visions sad,
The shades of grey,
The fancies that so haunt the little hours
Before the day.

Quiet the time-worn questions that are all
Unanswered yet;
Take from the spent and troubled souls of us
Their vain regret;

And lead us far into Thy silent land,
That we may go

Like children out across the field o' dreams
Where poppies blow.

So all Thy saints—and all Thy sinners too—
Wilt Thou not keep,
Since not alone unto Thy well-beloved
Thou givest sleep?

NOVEMBER

How like a hooded friar, bent and grey,
Whose pensive lips speak only when they pray
Doth sad November pass upon his way.

Through forest aisles while the wind chanteth low—

In God's cathedral where the great trees grow,
Now all day long he paceth to and fro.

When shadows gather and the night-mists rise,
Up to the hills he lifts his sombre eyes
To where the last red rose of sunset lies.

A little smile he weareth, wise and cold,
The smile of one to whom all things are old,
And life is weary, as a tale twice told.

“Come see,” he seems to say—“where joy has fled—

The leaves that burned but yesterday so red
Have turned to ashes—and the flowers are dead.

“ The summer’s green and gold hath taken flight, October days have gone. Now bleached and white

Winter doth come with many a lonely night.

“ And though the people will not heed or stay,
But pass with careless laughter on their way,
Even I, with rain of tears, will wait and pray.”

THE LILY-POND

ON this little pool where the sunbeams lie,
This tawny gold ring where the shadows die,
God doth enamel the blue of His sky.

Through the scented dark when the night wind sighs,
He mirrors His stars where the ripples rise,
Till they glitter like prisoned fireflies.

'Tis here that the beryl-green leaves uncurl,
And here the lilies uplift and unfurl
Their golden-lined goblets of carven pearl.

When the grey of the eastern sky turns pink,
Through the silver sedge at the pond's low brink
The little lone field-mouse creeps down to drink.

And creatures to whom only God is kind,
The loveless small things, the slow, and the blind,
Soft steal through the rushes, and comfort find.

Oh, restless the river, restless the sea!
Where the great ships go, and the dead men be;
The lily-pond giveth but peace to me.

LILACS

In lonely gardens deserted—unseen—
Oh! lovely lilacs of purple and white,
You are dipping down through a mist of green
For the morning sun's delight.
And the velvet bee, all belted with black,
Drinks deep of the wine which your flagons hold,
Clings close to your plumes while he fills his pack
With a load of burnished gold.

You hide the fences with blossoms of snow,
And sweeten the shade of castle towers;
Over low, grey gables you brightly blow,
Like amethysts turned to flowers.
The tramp on the highway—ragged and bold—
Wears you close to his heart with jaunty air;
You rest in my lady's girdle of gold,
And are held against her hair.

In God's own acre your tender flowers,
Bend down to the grasses and seem to sigh

For those who count time no more by hours—
Whose summers have all passed by—
But at eventide the south wind will sing,
Like a gentle priest who chanteth a prayer;
And thy purple censers he'll set a-swing,
To perfume the twilight air.

APRIL

APRIL! April! April!

With a mist of green on the trees—
And a scent of the warm brown broken earth
On every wandering breeze;
What, though thou be changeful,
Though thy gold turns to grey again,
There's a robin out yonder singing,
Singing in the rain.

April! April! April!

'Tis the Northland hath longed for thee,
She hath gazed toward the South with aching eyes
Full long and patiently.
Come now—tell us, sweeting,
Thou laggard so lovely and late,
Dost know there's no joy like the joy that comes
When hearts have learned to wait?

PAEANS

OH! I will hold fast to Joy!

I will not let him depart—

He shall close his beautiful rainbow wings

And sing his song in my heart.

And I will live with Delight!

I will know what the children know

When they dance along with the April wind

To find where the catkins grow!

I will dream the old, old dreams,

And look for pixie and fay

In shadowy woods—and out on the hills—

As we did but yesterday.

Love I will keep in my soul—

Ay! even by lock and key!

There is nothing to fear in all of the world

If Love will but stay with me.

No, I will not let Faith go!

I will say with my latest breath—

I know there's a new and radiant road

On the other side of Death.

THE HARP

ACROSS the wind-swept spaces of the sky
The harp of all the world is hung on high,
And through its shining strings the swallows fly.

The little silver fingers of the rain
Oft touch it softly to a low refrain,
That all day long comes o'er and o'er again.

And when the storms of God above it roll,
The mighty wind awakes its sleeping soul
To songs of wild delight or bitter dole.

And through the quiet night, as faint and far
As melody down-drifted from a star,
Trembles strange music where those harp-strings are.

But only flying words of joy and woe,
Caught from the restless earth-bound souls below,
Over the vibrant wires ebb and flow.

And in the cities that men call their own,
And in the unnamed places, waste and lone,
This harp forever sounds Life's undertone.

GULLS

WHEN the mist drives past and the wind blows
high,

And the harbour lights are dim—
See where they circle, and dip and fly,
The grey free-lances of wind and sky,
To the water's distant rim!

Like spirits possessed of a fierce delight,
A courage that cannot fail,
They face the breakers—they face the night—
The mad storm-horses are silvery white,
They ride through the bitter gale!

They seem like the souls of the long, long lost,
Who breasted the ocean-main—
Vikings whose vessels were tempest-tossed,
Voyagers who sailed, whatever the cost,
And never came home again.

Or stranger and wilder fancy—it seems
As I hear their wind-torn cry,
No birds fly there through the sun's last gleams,
But the wraiths of hopes—the ghosts of dreams
That the old sea-gods saw die.

When the mist drives past and the wind blows
high,

And the harbour lights are dim—
See where they circle, and dip and fly,
The grey free-lances of wind and sky,
To the far horizon's rim.

THE SHEPHERD WIND

WHEN hills and plains are powdered white,
And bitter cold the north wind blows,
Upon my window in the night
A fairy-garden grows.

Here poppies that no hand hath sown
Bloom white as foam upon the sea,
And elfin bells to earth unknown
Hold frost-bound melody.

And here are blossoms like to stars
Tangled in nets of silver lace—
My very breath their beauty mars,
Or stirs them from their place.

Perchance the echoes of old songs
Found here a resting place at last
With drifting perfume that belongs
To roses of the past.

Or all the moonbeams that were lost
On summer nights the world forgets

May here be prisoned by the frost
With souls of violets.

The wind doth shepherd many things—
And when the nights are long and cold,
Who knows how strange a flock he brings
All safely to the fold.

THE TEMPLE

ENTER the temple beautiful! The house not made with hands!

Rain-washed and green, wind-swept and clean,
Beneath the blue it stands,
And no cathedral anywhere
Seemeth so holy or so fair.

It hath no heavy gabled roof, no door with lock and key,
No window-bars shut out the stars,
The aisles are wide and free—
Here through the night each altar-light
Is but a moon-beam, silver-white.

Silently as the temple grew at Solomon's command,
Still as things seem within a dream
This rose from out the land:
And all the pillars, grey and high,
Lifted their arches to the sky.

Here is the perfume of the leaves, the incense of the pines—

The magic scent that hath been pent

Within the tangled vines:

No censor filled with spices rare

E'er swung such sweetness on the air.

And all the golden gloom of it holdeth no haunting fear,

For it is blessed, and giveth rest

To those who enter here—

Here in the evening—who can know

But God Himself walks to and fro!

And music past all mastering within the chancel rings;

None could desire a sweeter choir

Than this—that soars and sings,

Till far the scented shadows creep—

And quiet darkness bringeth sleep.

REQUEST

(To E. M.)

SING me a song—a song to ease old sorrows,
And dull the edge of care—
A song of Hope to ring through all the morrows
That be my share.

Unlock the doors where joy hath been in hiding,
Though barred they be and strong,
And send black grief far down the wind a-riding—
Sing me a song.

Sing thou thy sky-lark song of sweetest daring,
And April ecstasy,
That I may follow it and go a-faring
To Arcady.

Charm sleep from out the shadows with thy singing,
And when the light turns grey,
Leave me bright dreams until the dawn comes bringing
The rose-edged day.

The wind of March taught thee his springtime madness,
And then in undertone
Whispered the wonder-secret of his gladness
To thee alone.

And thou hast learned from little brook and river
Their tender melody—
The notes that set the thrush's throat a-quiver
Are known to thee.

Sing me a song—a song to ease old sorrows,
And dull the edge of care—
A song of Hope, to ring through all the morrows
That be my share.

A SONG

O HEART of mine—if I were but a swallow—
A thing so fearless, swift of flight, and free—
On wings unwearied I would find and follow
Some path that led to thee!

Were I a rose out in the garden growing
My sweetness I would give the vagrant breeze—
For he, perchance, might meet thee all unknowing—
Yet bring thee memories.

THE TOAST

A TOAST to thee, O dear old year,
While the last moments fly,
A toast to thy sweet memory—
We'll lift the glasses high,
And bid to thee a fond farewell
As thou art passing by!

A toast to those who reaped success
In this good year of grace;
A toast to every one of them—
Come! Give the victors place!
Come, wish them well with right good will—
The winners in the race!

And one toast more! To those who failed Wherever they may be;—
With faces white they fought the fight,
But missed the victory;
So here's to them—the ones who strove—
On land and on the sea!

Fair dreams to thee, O grey old year,
Thy working time is done,
And gone for thee the silver moon,
And golden noon-day sun;
Yet sad old year—and glad old year—
We'll know no better one.

THE SEA-SHELL

OH, fairy palace of pink and pearl
Frescoed with filigree silver-white,
Down in the silence beneath the sea
God by Himself must have fashioned thee
Just for His own delight!

But no!—For a dumb and shapeless thing
Stirring in darkness its little hour,
Thy walls were built with infinite care,
Thou sea-scented home, so fine and fair,
Perfect—and like a flower!

AT DAWN

TURN to thy window in the silver hour
That day comes stepping down the hills of
night,
Infolded as the leaves infold a flower
By all her rose-leaf robes of misty light.

Then, like a joy born out of blackest sorrow,
The miracle of morning seems to say,
“There is no night without its dear to-morrow,
No lonely dark that does not find the day.”

THE WHISTLER

THROUGHOUT the sunny day he whistled on his way—

Oh high and low, and gay and sweet,
The melody rang down the street,
Till all the weary, old, and grey,
Smiled at their work, or stopped to say,
“Now God be thanked that youth is fair,
And light of heart, and free from care.”

What time the wind blew high, he whistled and went by—

Then clarion clear on every side
The song was scattered far and wide;
Like birds above a storm that fly
The silver notes soared to the sky,
“O soul, whose courage does not fail
But with a song can meet the gale.”

And when the rain fell fast, he whistled as he passed—

A little tune the whole world knew,
A song of love, of love most true;

On through the mist it came at last
To one by sorrow overcast,

“Dear Christ,” she said, “by night and day
They serve who praise, as well as pray.”

Though the great world was white, he whistled in the night—

The sky was spangled all with gold,
The bitter wind was keen and cold,
Yet, gay musician, out of sight,
You still put wintry thoughts to flight,
For summer follows where you fare,
O Whistler, so debonair.”

And when the fog hung grey, he whistled on his way—

The little children in his train
With rosy lips caught up the strain.
Then I, to hear what he might say,
Followed with them, that sombre day.
“Is it for joy of life,” quoth I,
“Good sir, you go awhistling by?”
He smiled, and sighed, and shook his head,
“I cheer my own sad heart,” he said.

COMMON-WEALTH

GIVE thanks, my soul, for the things that are free!
The blue of the sky, the shade of a tree,
And the unowned leagues of the shining sea.

Be grateful, my heart, for everyman's gold;
By road-way and river and hill unfold
Sun-coloured blossoms that never are sold.

For the little joys sometimes say a grace;
The scent of a rose, the frost's fairy lace,
Or the sound of the rain in a quiet place.

Be glad of what cannot be bought or beguiled;
The trust of the tameless, the fearless, the wild,
The song of a bird and the faith of a child.

For prairie and mountain, windswept and high,
For betiding beauty of earth and sky—
Say a benediction e'er you pass by.

Give thanks, my soul, for the things that are free!
The joy of life and the spring's ecstasy,
The dreams that have been and the dreams that will be.

DON CUPID

Oh! little pink and white god of love,
With your tender smiling mouth,
And eyes as blue as the blue above,
Afar in the sunny south.

No army e'er laid so many low
Or wounded so many hearts,
No mighty gunner e'er wrought such woe
As you with your feathered darts.

HEAVEN

Not with the haloed saints would Heaven be
For such as I;
Who have not reached to their serenity
So sweet and high.

Not with the martyrs washed by holy flame
Could I find place,
For they are victors who through glory came
To see God's face.

Not with the perfect souls that enter there
Could mine abide,
For clouded eyes from eyes all cloudless fair
'Twere best to hide.

And not for me the wondrous streets of gold
Or crystal sea—
I only know the brown earth, worn and old,
Where sinners be.

Unless I found those who to me belong,
My dear and own,

I, in the vastness of that shining throng,
Would be alone.

God guide us to some sun-blessed little star,
We ask not where,
Nor whether it be near or it be far,
So Love is there.

SIR HENRY IRVING

"Thou trumpet made for Shakespeare's lips to blow!"

No more for thee the music and the lights,
Thy magic may no more win smile nor frown;
For thee, O dear interpreter of dreams,
The curtain hath rung down.

No more the sea of faces, turned to thine,
Swayed by impassioned word and breathless
pause;

No more the triumph of thine art—no more
The thunder of applause.

No more for thee the maddening, mystic bells,
The haunting horror—and the falling snow;
No more of Shylock's fury, and no more
The Prince of Denmark's woe.

Not once again the fret of heart and soul,
The loneliness and passion of King Lear;
No more bewilderment and broken words
Of wild despair and fear.

And never wilt thou conjure from the past
The dread and bitter field of Waterloo;

Thy trembling hands will never pluck again
Its roses or its rue.

Thou art no longer player to the court;
No longer red-robed cardinal or king;
To-day thou art thyself—the Well-Beloved—
Bereft of crown and ring.

Thy feet have found the path that Shakespeare found,
Life's lonely exit of such far renown;
For thee, O dear interpreter of dreams,
The curtain hath rung down.

October, 1905.

JEAN DE BREBŒUF

Jean de Brebœuf, a priest of the Jesuit Order, came to Canada as a missionary to the Indians about the year 1625. He belonged to an old and honourable French family that had given many sons to the army, and was a man of great physical strength, one who possessed an iron will, that was yet combined with sweetness and gentleness of temper.

He lived with the Indians for many years, and spoke the dialects of different tribes, though his mission was chiefly to the Hurons. By them he was much beloved.

At the time of the uprising of the Iroquois in 1649, there was a massacre of the Hurons at the little mission village of St. Louis upon the shores of Georgian Bay. There Jean de Brebœuf, refusing to leave his people, met death by torture at the hands of the conquering Iroquois. Lalement, his friend, a priest of the same order, was also martyred by these Indians upon the same day, March 16th, 1649.

As Jean de Brebœuf told his rosary

At sundown in his cell, there came a call!—

Clear as a bell rung on a ship at sea,

Breaking the beauty of tranquillity—

Down from the heart of Heaven it seemed to fall:

“Hail, Jean de Brebœuf! Lift thee to thy feet!

Not, for thy sins, by prayer shalt thou atone;

Thou wert not made for peace so deeply sweet,

Thine be the midnight cold, the noonday heat,

The journey through the wilderness, alone.

“ Too well thou lovest France—her very air
Is wine against thy lips—and all her weeds
Are in thine eyes as flowers. She is fair
In all her moods to thee—and even there,
See! thou dost dream of her above thy beads.

“ Rouse thee from out thy dreams! Awake!
Awake!

Thou priest who cometh of a martial line!—
Thou hast its strength, thy will no man can break:

Go forth unarmed, the law of love to take Into a lonely land, that yet is Mine.”

Then straightway fell the monk upon his face
Trembling with awe throughout his mighty frame.

“ I hear Thee, Lord! ” he cried. “ Give me Thy grace,

That I may follow thee to any place,
And speak to any people—in Thy name.”

The vine-leaf shadows darkened in the cell—
And barefoot friars passed the close-shut door;
At vespers rang the monastery bell,
Yet still he lay, unheeding, where he fell,
Across of black outstretched upon the floor.

.

Northward into the silence, night and day,
Through the unknown, with faith that did not fail,
Into the lands beneath the redman's sway,
The priest called Jean de Brebœuf took his
way,
Led by the Polestar and the far-blazed trail.

He bore the sacred wine cups, and a bell
Of beaten bronze, whose tongue should warn or bless;
As had been done in France, so he as well
Would ring a marriage chime or funeral knell
For his lone flock, out in the wilderness.

And like a phantom ever at his side
Pointing each hour to paths he scarce could see,
By wood and waterway, went one still guide,
Who drifted with the shades, when daylight died,
Into the deep of night, and mystery.

But when they reached the place of many pines,
God's country, that no white man yet had named—

They beached their birch canoe 'neath swinging vines,

For here, the Indian read by many signs,
Lay the wild land the tribe of Huron claimed.

Then like down-dropping pearls the rounded years,

One after one, slipped off the thread of Time,
And Jean de Brebœuf laboured—oft with fears
Safe-hidden, oftener still with smiles and tears,
Among the people of this northern clime.

The forest children had become a part

Of his own life—always he spoke their tongue,
He dwelt within their tents—with all his heart

He learned their ancient woodcraft, and each art

Their race had practised when the world was young.

He gave a simple truth and faithfulness

To men of silence and of subtle ways;

He shared with them long hunger and distress—

When they had little, he himself had less,
Through all the dark and lonely winter days.

High in the vast cathedral of the trees
He hung the bell of bronze; there in God's name
He taught the law of Love; there on his knees
In the sun-dappled gloom, midst birds and bees,
He lifted up the cross, with words of flame.

But evil days were come. The arrowhead
Was dipped in poison, and de Brebœuf saw
The painted faces and the swift-slain dead,—
The deep, unhealing wound—the rent of red
Made by the weapon of the Iroquois.

Closed in the village with its palisade,
Guarded by many a mighty Huron brave,
The women and the little children stayed,
Lest forest fire or sweeping midnight raid
Make all their hunting ground a common grave.

It was at daybreak that they heard the cry:
“The Iroquois!—The Iroquois! They come!
Fly to the hidden forest places! Fly!—
To linger in the village is to die—
Steal through the river grasses—and be dumb!”

Swiftly the women and the children fled,
But with the braves de Brebœuf stayed behind.
“Go!” cried the chief, “good father—we be dead!”

Yet soft he answered as he shook his head:
“I stay with thee—and with thy old and blind.”

.

When the red sun came creeping up the sky
Grey death had reaped the harvest hate had sown;

The Jesuit heard no longer curse or sigh—
His prayers were said for those about to die—
He faced the living Iroquois alone.

They bound him fast beneath the forest green,
And when was come the shadowy edge of night—
Nay—ask not what the horned owl hath seen, Nor what the moon doth know—white and serene
The soul of Jean de Brebœuf took its flight.

IN EGYPT

*It was the Angel Azrael the Lord God sent below
At midnight, into every house in Egypt, long ago—
O long, and long ago.*

ALL day the wife of Pharaoh had paced the palace hall

Or the long white pillared court that was open to the sky;

A passion of wild restlessness ensnared her in its thrall

While she fought a fear within her—a thing that would not die.

She had sent away her maidens—their weeping vexed her ears—

Their pallid faces filled her with impatient pitying scorn;—

But she kept one time-worn woman, who long had outgrown fears,

The old brown nurse who held her son the day that he was born.

The mighty gods had failed her—the river-gods
and the sun,

And the little gods of brass and stone—who stared but made no sign,

So she pled with them no longer, her prayers were said and done,

And now she neither bowed her head, or knelt at any shrine.

Her hair was blown upon the wind like wreathes
of golden flame,

And the sea-blue of her eyes cast blue shadows
on her face,

For she was not of Egypt—but unto the king
she came

A captive—yet a princess—from a northern sea-bound place.

She watched the fiery wheel roll down behind the level land,

One small hand curled above her eyes, and one above her heart,

But when the ruby afterglow crept up and stained the sand

She turned and gazed toward Goshen, where Israel dwelt apart.

.

Nine plagues had wasted Egypt with their tortures grim and slow;

The earth was desolated, and scarred by hail and fire;

Still even yet her Lord refused to let his bondsmen go

To worship in the wilderness, the God of their desire.

The yellow Nile had turned to blood before her watching eyes—

It was branded into memory—a haunting death-strewn sight;—

The very dust upon the street the rod had made to rise

In a living moving horror, of atoms, leprous-
white.

The frogs had come as things bewitched; an army without fear

They had broken through the rushes their upward way to take;

And each one followed steadily a voice no man could hear—

While poisoned wind and pestilence came swiftly in their wake.

Then oh, the little flies that swarmed from out the earth and air!

And the murrain of the camels, and cattle in the field!

She prayed the king for love of her to hear the people's prayer

And send the slaves far hither;—but for love
he would not yield.

His face was like the carven face upon the basalt door;—

Her beauty could not charm him, her voice had lost its power;

So she wrapped a veil about her and entreated him no more

But sat alone and watched, from out her window in the tower.

She saw the Hebrew leader with uncovered silvery hair

Come with the priest at daybreak to the outer palace gate,

And the rod of woe and wonder they carried with them there,—

Yet Pharaoh bid them enter—for he dared not bid them wait.

But naught prevailed, for sore disease had scourged the low and high,
And the hail of God had fallen and crushed
the growing grain,
And a fire no hand had kindled in searing wrath swept by—
Such fire as none had seen before—as none would see again.

Then came the pirate locusts, with a sea-song free and bold;—
The spent and broken people lacked the strength to force them back,
But watched them take the last green blades
that never would be gold—
And shut their doors against the foe that turned the meadows black.

Then Pharaoh wavered—more—he called the Hebrews in his haste
Imploring respite—pleading his repentance bitterly—
For there was death on every side, and all the land was waste;—
So the western wind of God blew the locusts out to sea.

Yet not enough. Once more the king denied his given word;

He dared the wrath of Heaven, and he made his heart as steel;

Then all the lights of God went out, and no man even stirred—

But stayed companioned by his fear, in darkness he could feel.

So had each dreadful day gone by, each slow
departing night,

And the queen stood now at sunset alone with grief and shame,

When one came running towards her through the failing crimson light,

A little lad, with Egypt's eyes—but hair like golden flame.

“Thou has been long, Beloved!” she cried, and frowned all tenderly,

“Indeed I have not seen thee since the burning noon took wing.”

“Mother of mine,” he answered, “I have been where I should be

These burdened times of Egypt—beside my Lord the King.

“ ’Twill take the country many days to gain its old time peace,
But thou shalt suffer nothing;—I, myself, will care for thee
And see that naught doth harm thee—until all these troubles cease;—
These sad and magic doings that no man can solve,” said he.

“ Ay! That thou wilt,” she said. “ But tell me, how doth fare the king?
Doth he relent? Or is his face forbidding—dark and cold?—
Or hath he sent thee hither but some word of me to bring
As he cannot leave the council, and now the day grows old? ”

He shook his head. “ I came because I longed to see thee so;—
And Pharaoh reads the chart of stars while time goes creeping by,
Or he sits in weary silence—or paceth to and fro.
Since he banished the magicians, all fear him
—all save I.

“Put on thy golden girdle with the mighty emerald clasp
And thy lotus broidered robe. Braid thy hair
all cunningly,
And wear the winged head-dress with the turquoise jewelled asp—
Then come and coax him from his gloom.—
Thou only canst,” said he.

“Wise counsellor!” she smiled; “Nay, but too
wise for thy short years,
I will unto the king;—and such great issues are at stake
This time I dare not fail. I must go queenly—without tears
Or humble supplications—but as one no woe can break.

“Stay thou with thy old nurse, Beloved—she sitteth in the hall—
And she will tell thee wondrous tales, to win
from thee a smile,
Then take thy supper by her side, and when deep night doth fall,
Go to the tower, whence I’ll come, but in a little while.”

Arrayed in her most lovely robes she took her stately way

By courtiers unattended, through the palace vast and still.

Her beauty was a thing to hold all bitterness at bay,

To move the hearts of men, and bend their spirits to her will!

She passed beneath the rose red lights that hung from roof and door,

And by unseeing gods, where curled an incense,
blue and sweet;

As one who walks in sleep she crossed the cool
mosaic floor,

That echoed to the music of her little sandalled feet.

She reached the council chamber and there entered silently;—

But though the bowing wise men had been reeds the wind could sway

Would have noted them as little. She only seemed to see

One face, inscrutable and dark, toward which she took her way.

The king sat still as Fate. "Most High," she said, "I come for truth

Of this new threat of vengeance. There is horror in the air;—

The Ethiopian runner hath brought word to me in sooth

Blood is sprinkled on the door-posts of the Hebrews everywhere!"

"There are rumours—so he sayeth—of an Angel who will slay

The first-born sons of Egypt—should these bondsmen not depart.

Thy people weep in anguish—I myself must hear thee say—

The Hebrew leader threatens no such danger to my heart—

"He is my heart—my inner heart;—O straight
he is and strong!

To me he meaneth Egypt—Egypt meaneth
but my son—

So I would take him swiftly toward the land where I belong

To return to thee in safety when these troubles
all are done."

“The streets are filled with mourners;—every day more tears are shed;
The embalmers have grown weary—they will not work for gold—
And everywhere the eye doth see processions of the dead,
Till they seem but mocking phantoms, we watch unmoved and cold.”

“Thou wilt not let the Hebrews go—I read it in thine eyes—
There are no gods in Egypt—there is nothing but thy Will—
That sets itself against some force that yet in strength will rise
But to silence all thine answers and bid thy voice be still.”

Then Pharaoh leaned down toward her: “O
most beautiful!” he said, “There is not a man who liveth dare say so
to my face;
And truly were there such a one ’twere better
he were dead,
For dead men suffer nothing.—Yet I pray thee
of thy grace

“Have patience now to hear me. ’Tis as the Ethiope heard.

They threatened all the first-born;—but the tower is brass and stone;

There my son shall stay to-night, guarded well,
I give thee word.—

Where armies could not enter—can one angel pass alone?

“Thinkst thou that I am one to be affrighted
by the dark?

A weakling to be played upon—a coward or a fool?

Nay!—I defy the Israelites!—Their weapons
miss their mark,

They have roused my utmost anger: it taketh long to cool.

“But thou!” he said; “but thou! Methinks had they but threatened thee

I should perchance have known the very quality of fear;—

Thou thing of perfect loveliness! Content mine eyes will be

Though in the land of Egypt is no blossom for a year.

“ But thou art queen, and thou art free;—free
now to go or stay,
I would not bind thee to my side—not by one golden hair.—
Leave thou this land of peril e’er the breaking of the day,
Or give thy life to my dark life—and bear
what it doth bear.”

Then blanched her face to whiteness of the lilies
on her gown,
And low she bowed as lilies bow in drift of wind and rain;
“ My Lord,” she said, “ I have no will except to lay it down
At thy desire. As I have done, so will I do again.

“ Thou art my king; my son is thine. It is not mine to say
That I will bear him hence.—Yet gropes my soul unto a light;
The quarrel is ’twixt Heaven and thee alone—
so I will stay
With him I love within the tower throughout this fateful night.”

“ And if the Angel cometh through the walls of stone and brass—

And if he toucheth Egypt’s son, to seal his gentle breath,

Then will we know that God is God, He who hath right to pass

Our little doors, for He Himself is Lord of Life and Death.”

.

O when the desert blossomed like a mystic silver rose,

And the moon shone on the palace, deep guarded to the gate,

And softly touched the lowly homes fast barred against their foes,

And lit the faces hewn of stone, that seemed to watch and wait—

There came a cry — a rending cry — upon the quivering air,

The sudden wild lamenting of a nation in its pain,

For the first-born sons of Egypt, the young, the strong, the fair—

Had fallen into dreamless sleep—and would not wake again.

And within the palace tower the little prince slept well,

His head upon his mother's heart, that knew
no more alarms;

For at the midnight hour—O most sweet and strange to tell—

She too slept deeply as the child close folded in her arms.

.

Hard through the city rode the king, unarmed,
unhelmeted,

Toward the land he loaned his bondsmen, the country kept in peace;

He swayed upon his saddle, and he looked as looked the dead—

The people stared and wondered though their weeping did not cease.

On did he ride to Goshen, and he called "Arise!
Arise!

Thou leader of the Israelites, 'tis I who bid you go!

Take thou these people hence, before the sun hath lit the skies;—

Get thee beyond the border of this land of death and woe!"

Across the plains of Egypt through the shadows of the night

Came the sound as of an army moving onward steadily,

And their leader read his way by the stars'
eternal light

While all the legions followed on their journey to the sea.

.

The moon that shineth overhead once saw these mysteries—

And then the world was young, that hath these many years been old;

If Egypt drank her bitter cup down even to the lees

Who careth now? 'Tis but an ancient tale that hath been told.

Yet still we hear the footsteps—as he goeth to and fro—

*Of Azrael, the Angel, that the Lord God sent below,
To Egypt—long ago.*

A SONG OF POPPIES

I LOVE red poppies! Imperial red poppies!
Sun-worshippers are they;
Gladly as trees live through a hundred summers
They live one little day.

I love red poppies! Impassioned scarlet poppies!
Ever their strange perfume
Seems like an essence brewed by fairy people
From an immortal bloom.

I love red poppies! Red, silken, swaying poppies!
Deep in their hearts they keep
A magic cure for woe—a draught of Lethe—
A lotus-gift of sleep.

I love red poppies! Soft silver-stemmed, red poppies,
That from the rain and sun
Gather a balm to heal some earth-born sorrow,
When their glad day is done.

A PAGAN PRAYER

LORD of all Life! When my hours are done,
Take me and make me anew—
And give me back to the earth and the sun,
And the sky's unlimited blue.

The nightingale sings in an ecstasy
To the moonlit April night,
But my songs are locked in the heart of me,
Like birds that may not take flight.

The little purple-winged swallows that fly
Through waves of the upper air,
Have a sweeter liberty, Lord, than I,
Who may not follow them there.

Pavilions of sunshine—tents of the rain,
For these, the wild and the free;
And for us walled garden and window-pane,
And bolt and staple and key.

We are worn with wisdom that never brings
Peace to the world and its woe—
For a space with Thy joyous lesser things,
Teach me the faith I would know.

A LOVE SONG

Oh haste, my Sweet! Impatient now I wait,
The crescent moon swings low, it groweth late,
A night bird sings, of Life, and Love, and Fate!

Oh haste, my Sweet! Youth and its gladness goes,
Joy hath one summer time, like to the rose,
Love only lives through all the winter snows.

Then haste, my Sweet! These hours are all our own,
And see! A rose leaf on the night breeze blown!
For thee I wait—for thee I wait alone!

LEITCHWORTH
THE TEMPLE PRESS
PRINTERS

MAR 2 1990

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

